

The vast extensions of the cereal farmland in Tierra de Campos is dotted with some original and beautiful examples of traditional architecture made of local clay ideal for making adobe and mud walls.

And one of the most important instances of this kind of folk architecture is the traditional adobe pigeon-houses where the birds live.

The variety is the common denominator of this route, with square, rectangular, horseshoe-shaped, cylindrical pigeon-houses, with or without patios, ornamented or not, etc...

Two kinds of pigeons live in the pigeon-houses: the feral pigeon (Columba livia) and the stock dove (Columba oenas).

As well as Tierra de Campos this route also goes through Palencia, Zamora and the North of Portugal, the idea is that visitors do not only go to the places where they can see these constructions but also to where there are other artistic and cultural elements along the way.
